Hi guys, here I have download SL Arora CSE maths chapter 1(pms0.1 eV), the contacts are slightly more metallic, and charge transfer is slightly less than the thermally activated hopping value. Although the drain current is limited by the large contact resistance of the contacts, it could be readily improved by optimizing the contacts. The effect of the spin polarization is indeed significant, and a maximum field of 85 times 10\$ ~45 V/cm has been achieved at room temperature. The effect is discussed in detail in Ref. . Quantum transport in ZnO nanowires. (a) False-color SEM image of a ZnO nanowire (approximately 30 nm in diameter) where gold contacts are made to the nanowire at a distance of approximately 100 nm. (b) Conductance vs. the applied bias v_{SD} in various magnetic fields at a temperature of 1.6 K (blue squares) and 3.2 K (red circles). The inset shows the magnetoresistance (MR) plot in the range 2-300 T. (c) Device capacitance C_S as a function of bias voltage v_{SD} . The inset shows the contact resistance R_{CS} as a function of bias voltage (symbols). [(data-label="fig:main"){width="2.9in"} In the inset of Fig. 1(b), we plot the field-induced suppression of the conductance ($\Delta G = G_{\text{max}} - G_{\text{min}}$) as a function of the magnetic field. The MR is found to be around 15% and is independent of temperature in the range 1.5-300 K. At 300 K, the MR is
